Dear Mr. Arave:

After our meeting on April 3, 2008, I was able to gather documents and pictures to support our request for a late claim to water rights on the Terry Family Trust property north of Salmon. The paperwork was mailed to the court and other agencies listed. After mailing everything, my father and I were talking about the points of diversion requested. He is now concerned that we will need one or two more additional points along the river which would be closer to some of the property needing irrigation. The costs of resurrecting the pump and pipes which cross over the steep "saddle" from the river to the main property could be exceedingly expensive. Here are my questions:

Is it too late to request more points of diversion?

Is there a way to amend what was sent in without starting over?

Should we just let the late claims go through and hope our requests for water rights get approved and then ask for more diversion points?

Any help you could give me is appreciated. I have enclosed the map with the original points of diversion and my notes regarding one or two new points. Our subcase is 75-14511.

Sincerely,

Lynda Borchert
