E. REASONS SUPPORTING OBJECTION(S): The original claimed point of diversion should actually be classified as a point of rediversion. Teton Creek splits into a main channel, and a side channel at the above described point of diversion. The side channel has been altered and modified to be an irrigation ditch, much like the Dry Bed on the South Fork of the Snake River.

Water is diverted down the converted side channel, and it is then rediverted down a ditch which has its heading at a screw headgate located at 5N R45E Sec. 36 NWNE.
