This claim is for water from Goose Creek. Conveyance of Goose Creek water to the subject property was made possible when the Campbell Ditch (Goose Creek Canal) was constructed. The Campbell Ditch was a combination of enlarging an existing canal and extending the canal north to the subject property and beyond.

The original portion of the canal; sometimes called the Osborn, Clay, Waggy Canal; was used to convey Goose Creek water to several upstream ranches. Our priority is junior to these upstream users assuming these upstream users have decreed water rights.

The water for the subject property is conveyed through the Campbell Ditch to Fourmile Creek, diverted into Fourmile Creek and then out of Fourmile into a ditch that flows north. Please see Encl. 1. This means the earliest that Goose Creek water could have been used on the subject property is when the Campbell Ditch reached Fourmile Creek. Enclosure 2 gives clear evidence that the Canal was completed on both sides of Fourmile Creek prior to January 12, 1922. It seems reasonable that construction would have proceeded on an upstream to downstream basis and that the canal would have reached Fourmile Creek so that beneficial use of Goose Creek water could have been provided in the spring and summer of 1921. In fact the June 12, 1922 letter (Enclosure 3) suggests the flume was to be completed in July 1922 and that this would complete the project.

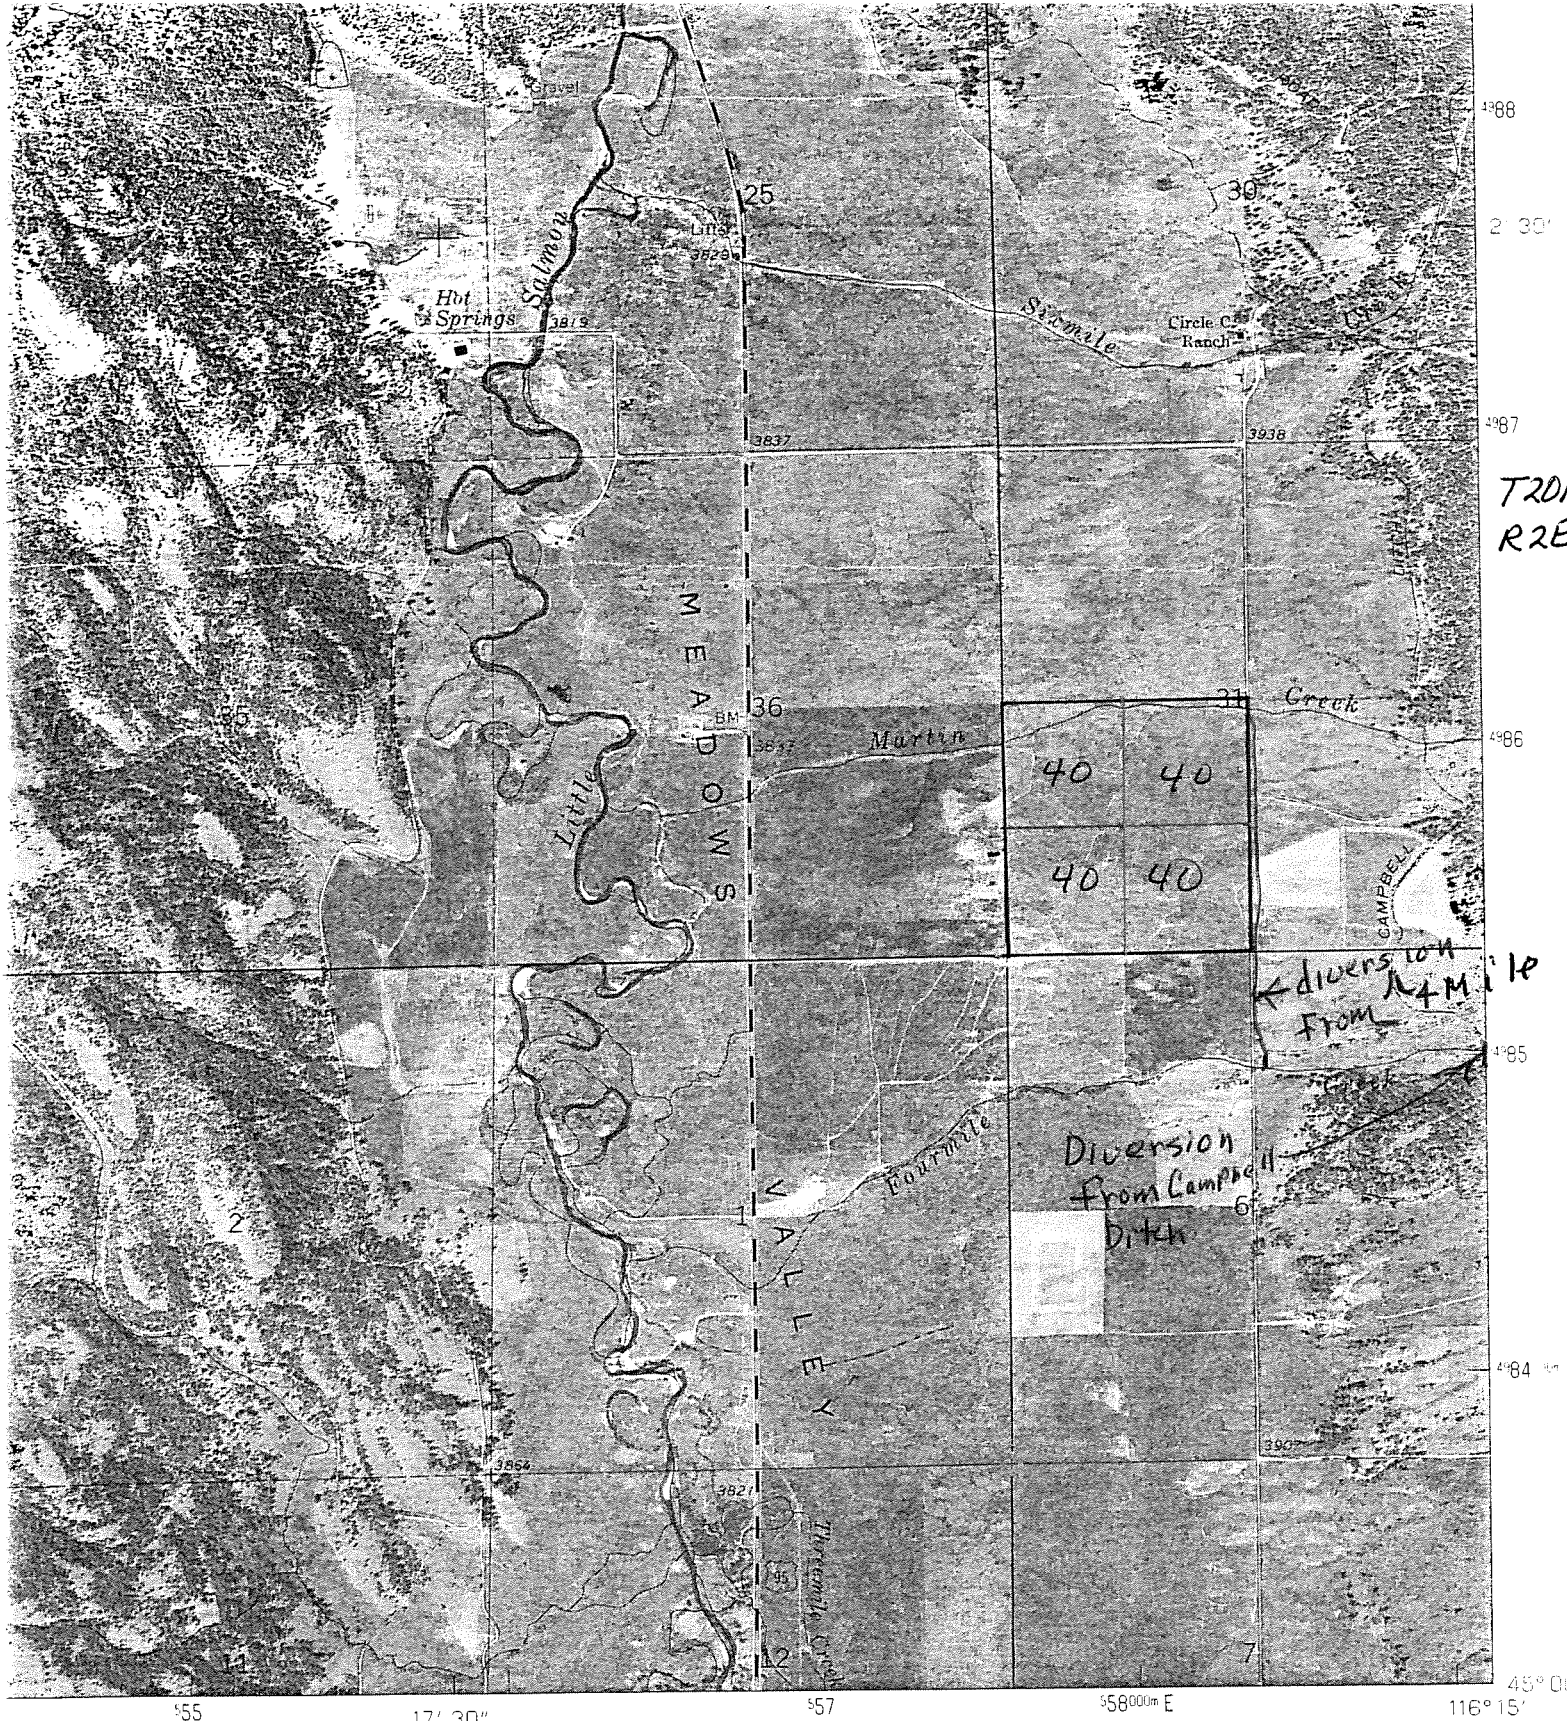

In Summary:

- a) The subject property could have and probably did use Goose Creek water for irrigation by the spring of 1921 or earlier.
- b) Upstream water users were using Goose Creek water on their property before the Campbell Ditch was extended to convey water to the subject property.
- c) There was a decree allocating water that established the water rights of the early water users in Meadows Valley. This decree was finalized September 25, 1922
- d) It would seem appropriate for the early upstream water users to have the first rights to Goose Creek water with the lands farther north having a later priority.

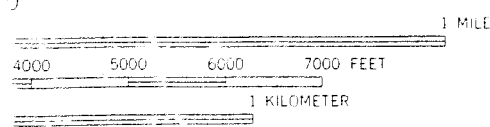

Therefore we have concluded the day after the decree, September 26, 1922 is the appropriate priority date for this Water Right

Dear Sir:

Please refer to your letter of Jan. 4, 1922, concerning extension of time to Wm Branstetter for completion of works under permit No 14461. Just as he was about beginning the work of making the flume across Four Mile creek, Mr Branstetter was stricken with hernia and was obliged to go away for an operation.

This is to ask if Mr Branstetter may have an extension of time till July 16, 1922, for completion of works.
