Linda W. – Having struck out trying to pin down photos through the historical society and museums, I spend some time surfing the web yesterday, trying to find photos of old hospitals in north Idaho. I found one of the “West Shoshone Hospital,” which Justin confirms is indeed the old Shoshone Hospital that was built in the mid-late 1950’s and was torn down when hospital operations moved into the current medical center (located just south, as I understand it, of the location of the older hospital). This photo is standing south and looking north. It shows the landscaping that everyone recalls was irrigated using water from the reservoir.

Justin also confirms that the second attachment, top photo, is the Kellogg High School. He said that the irrigation (landscaping) in the front of the high school is the same as far back as he can remember, and uses the same water system used today.

The water system that Justin describes in the documentation submitted with the Amended Claim piped water from the reservoir to both the School and the Hospital. The documentation (with these photos and recollections in the affidavits) shows the water was used for domestic uses and irrigation at both facilities in the early years. As Justin describes and the site visit confirmed, the reservoir water from this system continues to be used for irrigation today (with the other claimed uses) at the school and the medical center.

These photos are for consideration, with the affidavits and other information submitted with the Amended Claim, and for our call on Friday. Thank you, Linda Linda – I did not have any luck finding a photo in the USGS site. They have older blank and white single frame aerial shots going back to 1937, but none of that area from the 1955-1965 period. These are hard to view details too, as they are not high resolution and zooming in loses the detail. For the color tax parcel maps, I did not find anything going back that far. I spoke to the Idaho Historical Society and they did not have photos of Shoshone County in that time period. They did send a photo of the prior hospital (constructed in 1907), but I don’t think that will help. The North Idaho Museum did not have relevant photos of Kellogg, Shoshone County. The Kellogg Mining Museum may find something, but I have not heard back from them. They have a “medical equipment” exhibit and I was hoping it might have a picture of the hospital.

Justin sent the attached affidavits from board members, two of whom have recollections of the Hospital from the 1950-60’s time period. These also explain the board members understanding and knowledge of this water system. Is there a good time to call you today, to talk about the status and whether these affidavits provide the evidence we are looking for? I am available any time today. Thanks, Linda 208-383-3931.
