The Freeman Story

We had been in Hillyard about two years when one summer day, Mark got his great commanding Dream that almost drove him to his death. We had taken some of the young people out to a beautiful location on a lovely lake in Idaho which the Methodists had bought for the young people to come together every summer for teaching and good times. Mark looked over these lovely sloping woodland acres and the beautiful lake and heard God's voice say to him, "Mark this place must be made fit for my children. No one is willing to do it For this purpose you are here.

His orders from God, but so much to do to make it a fit place. There were no houses on the place, no dining hall where young folks could meet together and above all, no drinking water. Water had to be hauled in from a neighboring farm in cans. Mark saw all this but there was not a question in his heart as to how he, a busy, poor minister could do the impossible. He just started out to do it. His vision was many rustic cottages of one room each, built under the furs and pine trees and of a large dining hall and even of a well of clear sparkling water.

He asked the Ministers for permission to start to build and they gave him little encouragement as there was very little money to use for it. Somehow he scraped up a few dollars and bought lumber at a nearby lumber mill. Then with a few pounds of nails and his saw and hammer, he started out. When the Ministers saw Mark really meant it and knew what he was doing, they began to help a little. Work Days were held. Men and young folks would go to Twinlow for a big picnic and help with the work. Finally he got about twenty cabins built and a large dining hall and kitchen. He hired cooks and girls to help and charged a nominal sum to the young people for their good cooked meals together in the hall. It caught on and soon money was coming in. Still, water had to be carried in for the hundreds of young people that would gather there each summer. Mark had begged the Ministerial Commission of Twinlow to have a well dug so that he would not have the hard job of bringing in the huge amount of drinking water each day. But they refused, saying no water had ever been found there and that was that. Mark had always been a student of geology and he felt sure if they went deep enough they would find water. He even consulted the leading Geologist from the University in Spokane and he thought they would find it too, but still the Commission refused. Mark had dug down 30 feet or so by the dinary and found there was a cold blast of air coming from the depth of 20 feet or more that kept constant all summer and in the cold of winter the air was sucked down into the hole. He made use of this by making a "cold" room using the natural reffridgeration - a geological phenomenon to keep the food and vegetables. Now there were well over a thousand young folks from all the big Denominations coming to Twinlow for different summer camps. Mark heard there was a huge wooden water tank being sold in the country, so he bought it very cheaply and took it down piece by piece and took it to Twinlow and put it up on a hill above the grounds himself and then bought a pump that would pump lake water into it and this made piped water for all the ground and modern toilets and bathing facilities. He also made a huge assembly hall. Earlier he had made an out doors assembly hall in a natural amphitheater, but knew there would have to be a place to meet when it rained or got to hot. A huge fireplace was built right in the center of the assembly hall. His desire was to dig for a well near the hall and even if they did not get water, they would get cold air to cool the place for the very hot days, for the hotter it got, the stronger and cooler would blow the air.

Mark would go during the week, driving the 35 miles back and forth whenever he could get away in the winter and then on Saturdays he would take his weekly bulletin around to each of the church members. Sundays were very full for he had two churches and had to rush from the Hillyard one to the small church ten miles in the country. The people impassable. Finally the housing projects at the plants had been finished and Mark closed the camp. He paid all his bill and had enough to clear the whole debt he had incurred. Now Twinlow was altogether free of debt and had a little money in the bank. He quietly went to the Commission meeting and handed them the keys to everything and said he had done all he could, not it was up to them. He was finished. We were in the Valley by this time in a large new church that Mark had started building before. The Ministers were all very skeptical, saying that Mark could not keep his hand off Twinlow, but Mark had finished and seemed to have put it out of his mind so he had his other appointments and while he kept up his interest in Twinlow, he almost never went there again.
