SUBJECT: Claims 36-07213 & 7486, Thomas Warner

The recommendations for these rights, and the underlying licenses, are bogus. The licensed ground of 360 acres was never irrigated. I visited the farm today accompanied by Mr. Warner. He has owned this land since 1987, the year of the ASCS photo. I found 330 acres to be presently irrigated, which appears to be the largest number of acres that were ever irrigated by the licensed well. He has made some improvements in the system since buying the ground, so could have added some acres that were not originally farmed. The original licensing exam did not contain enough information to determine what the original irrigation system was like (handlines, pivots, etc.). The second exam (36-07486) was also not completely clear on the system description. Mr. Warner did say that the big east pivot was the original delivery system on that part of the farm. He was very open and cooperative during my visit, so I trust the info he provided. Anyway, it appears reasonable to recommend the presently-irrigated ground as a permissible place of use for these two rights. A dairy-conversion transfer will be filed on these rights, so I needed to determine the present usage as part of the transfer process. Mr. Warner did not think that an SRBA agent had been out to look at the property, so I don't know how the SRBA recommendation was developed. The NAPP photo shows that some of this land was not irrigated in 1986, but this was not taken into account. Steve made the recommendation.
