Easley -- Before Ketchum and Hailey were Born

By NELLIE EASLEY WILLIAMS

Fifty years ago in May my father, mother and brother and myself arrived in the Wood River valley coming overland from Salt Lake City by way of Blackfoot. We camped one night in Bellevue, "the gate city," a thriving town filled with prospectors, miners, gamblers and families all expecting to make fortunes by striking it rich in the mines, or plying their various trades. The next day we drove on to Ketchum, passing through the Hailey townsite, where we saw the first building in process of construction, made of logs, and with the walls about half way up. Those who owned the townsite predicted it would be the metropolis of Wood River.

Stages were running through to Sawtooth City and Vienna and in addition to the prospectors and people looking for business locations there were a lot of men engaged in cutting ties for Coe & Carter, an Omaha firm furnishing ties for the Oregon Short Line which in the winter of 1882 was building through Idaho to the Pacific northwest.

My father decided to open a station and stopping place for travelers and we moved on to what was known as Easley station located on the present highway across from what is now Easley swimming pool. He built the first bath house, a crude log building and dug out the spring so we had a fine place for bathing, going across the river on a foot log. One day while we were still living in the tent we saw a big black bear come down the hill just the other side of where we were and watched him in fear and trembling as my father was in bed with rheumatism and I don't recall having had any kind of a weapon.

Another day some Chinamen came along with a cat in a box on the back of their wagon which we bought for $2.50, and I have no doubt most of the cats in Ketchum where we lived later are her descendants. Every day there was a stage each way from Sawtooth City and Vienna and that year, 1881, the toll road was built across the Galena summit, with a toll gate at Galena and one at the foot of the mountain on the Salmon river side. Passengers and drivers had dinner at our place and horses were changed there. The stages were Concordes to which were driven four horses.

Among my most pleasant remembrances are visits I made every summer with friends in Sawtooth and I rode on horseback to the Silver King mine when they were stripping the vein two days after its discovery. In July, 1884, Mr. E. B. Williams and I were married at Easley station and made our home in Ketchum. The evening of our wedding day we were serenaded by the Ketchum band of 25 pieces, two of the bandmen were brothers of Joe Montgomery of Hailey. We had a carpeted floor which was thickly padded with straw, a whatnot, marble topped center table and all the houses that were up to date had bay windows where we raised house plants, which usually froze in the winter. Among our wedding gifts was an old fashioned silver caster, a plush photograph album, plush collar and handkerchief boxes and other things that are now relegated either to the attic or trash pile.

Not many people now living will remember that Ketchum had the largest hall for dancing and other gatherings on Wood River but Hailey furnished the music for dances with an orchestra composed of Professor Delius, who later was leader of an orchestra in a prominent Seattle theatre, Chaslie Haupt, bass viol, and a piano player whose name I cannot recall. This was often augmented by the flute played by George Lewis and the cornet played by Horace Lewis both of Ketchum. There was also quite a large stage where traveling troupes and amateurs presented plays. This was called Fitzsimmons hall and was above a large saloon.

Ketchum also boasted a public library which was kept in the back part of the Union church, now owned by the Episcopalians and looked after by various women on certain afternoons each week. Mingled with the happy days were many sad ones when tragedy overtook the community especially in the killing of many men by snowslides.

'Tis a Long Way from Old Virginia To the Beauties of Camas Prairie

By MRS. W. Y. PERKINS

It was in the spring of 1885 that we left Virginia with three husky youngsters for the west. Our first stop was at Greenwood Kentucky, a coal mining town in the Cumberland mountains and here we stayed for two years. In 1887 with a new addition to the family, another boy, we left Kentucky for Idaho. We detrained at Bellevue and a few days later went to Camas Prairie and settled on a ranch one mile east of Soldier which was to remain our home until the place was sold during the land rush of 1904-1906.

Camas Prairie in pioneer days was a beautiful country. There were only a few settlements then and these were along the creeks that traverse the prairie from north to south and empty into the Malad. A large proportion of the settlers were bachelors, and many of them were stockmen and cowpunchers who appropriated government land with the idea of making permanent homes. There were very few fences and they were not used to impound the owners' animals as a rule, but rather to keep the herds and of range cattle and horses away from truck gardens or small fields of grain or hay.

In the days before the sheep came, large bunches of horses and cattle swarmed all over Camas Prairie and they were cared for by cow-boys. The keep the stock away from the homesteads and ranches and to round the animals up in the fall and herd them toward the winter range. The most of this stock was wintered in the Snake River valley.

In the early days instead of the spacious fields of wheat, oats, barley and alfalfa, there were miles and miles of waving wild grass—truly a stockman's paradise. I think that first summer we were in Idaho we cut wild grass for our winter hay. Very often, in later years even, hay was harvested on the public domain.

No picture of Camas Prairie, especially in those far off days, is complete without a reference to the wild flowers. They grew in profusion and in endless varieties.

When venison time came the family provider could get on his pony after breakfast, ride up to the foothills where there were quaking-asps and cherry thickets, and usually get back home in time for supper with a nice deer. Thus would fresh meat be provided for some time. It was not unusual to depend on venison for our winter's meat supply. I recall one time of having 13 hams, or hind quarters as they were generally called, salted down for winter. The system was to use or give away the front quarters and to salt down or "jerky" the hams.

The light snow fall during recent years may have caused some to forget the heavy snows in other days. But a snow fall of four or six feet was not unusual, neither was it so bad. Every one had snow shoes and could use them. The boys took their girls to the dances on snow shoes, and they had wonderful times dancing to the strains of ancient melodies produced on the fiddle and banjo.

We were on Camas Prairie 18 years before a doctor, dentist or preacher was stationed here. We did have postal service and a daily mail, when the mail-carrier didn't get snowed under. Under such circumstances he would resurrect a pair of snow shoes that had been previously "cracked" or stuck by the roadside, unhitch his team and turn it into some one's feed yard, take his mail bags on his back, and mush along until he got in or until some expectant rancher would meet him with a toboggan or a fresh team. We were all anxious to see the mail carrier and get news from the outside or from the "folks back home."

About 1901 the first public utility arrived: the telephone, later by some 10 years, the railroad, then improved highways, and the motor vehicles, oil stations and kindred enterprises.

In due time plenty of grade schools were established, a high school, duties of the latter seemed to be to churches, beauty parlors, motion picture theatres, and all other modern necessities and luxuries; and the way is open for the airplanes.

In passing it should be noted that no finer men and women ever lived any place than the old timers on Camas Prairie. In sickness, death, or trouble you could count on aid from the whole community; whether it was a doctor, medicine or a coffin to be gone after, help was always ready. Many heroic deeds were performed without expectation of reward except the consciousness of duty well performed.

I have lived at Soldier for 45 years and in five different counties: Alturas, Alta, Logan, Blaine and Camas.

James F. Hough was born in Pennsylvania, March 18, 1829. At the age of 14 years he moved with his family to Williams county, Ohio, where his father had an unbroken fur-trail to the Blue dog cabins of the western country, and widely scattered. He was one of the first to go west, and was in the company of the Western Reserve brigade of the Ohio militia, and was one of the first to enter the new state of Ohio. He was compelled to leave the army and to go to the west, and he was one of the first to enter the new state of Ohio. He was one of the first to enter the new state of Ohio.

H. M. W. Y. PERKINS

It was a long way from old Virginia to the beauties of Camas Prairie. The stockmen of the olden days had a long journey to make. They had to travel through the mountains and valleys, and across the great plains, to reach the beauties of Camas Prairie. The journey was long and hard, but the stockmen were determined to reach their destination. The beauties of Camas Prairie were a sight to behold. The grass was green and the flowers were in bloom. The stockmen were happy to be there. They had reached their destination and they were all well. The beauties of Camas Prairie were a sight to behold.

Attention, Trish

Per our phone conversation on 11-29-01 at 1351hrs. I was advised by our attorney to make sure IDWR has our current address on the Easley Hot Springs water right #37-04379 and the Forest Service Number on this same right is 1413545. I am told we will be going through similar settlements with the forest service over this water right in 2003 as we have our well water this year. We found in this last battle we did not receive any notices from your offices due to the Ketchum Post office changing our address. Thus you did not have the new correct one in our files there. In that event you told me to send you our current address and it is Cathedral Pines Baptist Camp/Easley Hot Springs, HC64 Box 8296 Ketchum, Id. 83340 Phone /Fax 736-8000. I would ask again that a letter be sent to me that I can place in my files here confirming you have our current address on file for any and all water rights involving either Cathedral Pines Baptist Camp or Easley Hot Springs both of which are owned by the Idaho Baptist Convention. Thank You for your kind demeanor and willingness to help me in our conversation this has been a real stress filled process over our water rights and dealing with people like you make it so much better.

Sincerely, Serving Jesus Daily
