Vickie –

This e-mail is to follow up on our conversations of the past few days. The number referenced above in the subject line are water rights and not permits. Hence, any new purchaser of the land and rights must file a change of water right ownership to transfer ownership of these rights into the new owners' names.

The fee is $25 per water right for a total of $75. The form states what documentation is required and generally is a recorded warranty deed with a legal description that matches the legal description in our files, a map with the property outlined, and with the point of diversion, which I believe in this case is a well, noted on the map, and any other information the new owners think may be helpful in our locating the rights and property.

You stated that the current owners, now the sellers, did not change the water right ownership. That is not a problem. IDWR requires that the new owners file the change of ownership, and as long as the information such as the legal description corresponds to our records, we can change the ownership.

If it makes the purchasers feel better, they can include the deed conveying the property to the current owners/sellers and that will connect the dots for the Department.

Call if you have additional questions.
