I don't oppose approval of this application but need to understand how much water is to be diverted at the new headgate with measuring device which the last time I was there there was no measuring device

Also the cut flow doesn't return to what you call the existing ditch. It is dumped into a ditch of yours that feeds a gravity system lower down that irrigates your property

What you call the existing ditch also supply water to users on down the valley.

And I see nothing saying that there is also a pipe line feeding into this pen & from springs feeding on down to water users down the valley which is already in place but has no headgate on it to control or measure flows
