Additional details for Part I.5.a.

About 850-feet upstream of the proposed new point of diversion, a small rock wingwall dam directs flow from the main river channel into a river side-channel, where flow is subsequently diverted at the proposed new point of diversion into another channel that serves as a place of use for 63-12550 (aesthetic). A 4-ft standard contracted rectangular weir is maintained near the point of diversion for measurement. A lockable headgate can be installed upstream of this weir if required. Water used under the Canyon County Water Co (CCWC) rights included in this transfer is pumped from the channel used for 63-12550 and applied with sprinklers for irrigation. If required, a flowmeter can be installed in the irrigation system pipeline. Also, if required, flow can be controlled with a lockable control valve.

At the new point of diversion, 23½ shares of CCWC water, equivalent to 0.47 cfs, will be diverted to serve approximately 23.5 acres located within the company's service boundary at T04N R02W Section 15. Although this property has historically received water through the company's conveyance system, delivery is cumbersome and a change in point of diversion simplifies delivery.
