Well water on property

The well at the cabin on the above described property was, we were told, dug and rocked up in 1911 at or about the time the cabin was built. A hand pump was used to draw water. When we acquired the cabin in 1947 the hand operated pump was still used. After power became available in about 1951 or 1952, and electric pump was installed and all domestic water use thereafter was supplied by it. Many times the water supply was used to wash needles and debris from the roof, water plants and trees, wash off the house, etc. The well was capable of supplying all the water the half horsepower pump could pump operating continuously over periods of several hours at full discharge.

Purity of the water from the well was checked by the county at least once a year - oftener during the first several years - until 1984. It was always found to be suitable for human consumption without any filtering or treatment.

Sincerely,
