To Whom This May Concern:

In approximately 1951-52 the well on Brice Checketts' farm was dug. Wynn Nelson was the owner at that time. This was done for agriculture and dairy use. When they tested it, it pumped approximately 2000 gallons per minute. But as they pumped, after approximately 8 hours, the sand and rock sucked up inside the casing and stopped the pump. The well driller baled it out, but they didn't test again.

When Vern Curtis installed a new pump after he purchased the farm in approximately 1982 or 1983, I tested the water flow with a meter and it would hold at 250 gallons per minute.
