5. Description of diverting works:

The spring water is captured by a pipe that then feeds a plastic cistern. From the cistern the water uses gravity flow to fill a very small pond. A pump is also used to help boost the pressure to irrigate the acreage. There are portable stock troughs that are also connected throughout the area that stock drink from. This point of diversion was added about 10 years ago to increase efficiency. Water that is not captured by the first diversion system/pipe is then captured from the same small pond by the property. This pond was constructed long ago and to the best of my knowledge is the original diversion system.
