5. Description of diverting works:

Reservoir with a 17 foot dam. The dam has three places where water can be diverted from. One is the spill way where water flows over the top of the dam. The other is a pipe that pulls water from the bottom of the reservoir, and a ditch from the north end of the reservoir. On this water right we use both the pipe and the spill way to supply water through this part of the system. The property has been irrigated with many different systems. Probably started with flood irrigation, then was converted to hand and wheel sprinkler lines. We bought the property two years ago and are working on getting the property up and running again. We have put in one pivot, there was already a pivot when we bought it, and we are planning on installing more pivot lines as we are able. The pivot we installed falls partly out of the place of use for the license, but this field was also actively being farmed by the past owners. We believe that this field was also irrigated with this water right. The pivots are fed with a pipe that runs from the dam. Parts of the property are set up for flood irrigation with dikes and diversion points from Sheep Creek. Water is diverted from the dam, used in some fields, then diverted back into Sheep Creek and runs down the creek and is diverted out of the creek along various points to irrigate the rest of the property.
