Water Master's Annual Report 2025

2/26/26

The 2025 irrigation season was significantly worse for the bulk of water users than the previous year, but not terrible. Deliveries were lower than the previous two years and the days of availability were shortened for the majority of users, but generally cooler weather lessened the overall adverse affects.

No budget increase is proposed for the upcoming season. This year's apportioning factor is still higher than last year, at about $6.45 per 24-hr second foot, and will likely rise due to anticipated drought despite no proposed budget increases.

Snow pack thus far looks to be very low, but the coming months could certainly change this outlook. Streams have been flowing quite high due to warmer than average temperatures and this lack of high-country water retention coupled with extremely poor snow pack is definitely worrisome for the irrigation season ahead.

2025 was reasonably quiet with respect to conflicts or maintenance issues, however the proposed Cottonwood Subdivision and accompanying proposed domestic wells had neighboring water users concerned about these impacts if surface irrigation was reduced while groundwater extraction was increased.

Again, to the best of my knowledge, most water users continue to work together as needed to maintain laterals and diversions, but it may prove necessary for some users to add secondary measurement devices in order to take splits with changes in water distribution styles.

Disturbance from livestock remains a challenge throughout the district on both stream channels and laterals and I ask that landowners employ best practices to limit erosion and associated sediment load.

Water Master's Annual Report 2025

As Table 1, "Five Year Totals and Averages" illustrates, 2025 billable water deliveries were roughly 35 % lower (~2171 24 Hr sf) less than the previous year. Deliveries are expressed in 24-hour second feet (1 cubic foot per second over a twenty-four hour period), equal to 1.9835 acre feet. The proposed budget less carryover and yearly fixed assessments, divided by the five-year-average yields an apportionment factor of $6.447
