The springs was developed by the homesteader with a small spring box, then later in the 1980's the NRCS renovated the springs. Originally the homesteaders used the spring water for their cabins. The water was collected in a springbox and hauled in buckets for daily use by Ace Jensen and Ike Johnson. After my grandfather Heber Kunz bought the place, they would stay in the cabins while farming the land in the summer. They continued to use the spring, hauling water in buckets and drinking directly from the spring box. The cabins are not used anymore, but we have continued to use the springs to meet our culinary needs; drinking, cooking, and washing dishes while we are working or camping out on the place.
